

Amy Niles- River & Watershed Manager

Amy Niles has been working for the City of New Braunfels for 10 years. Her role has grown over time, and is currently the River and Watershed Manager, responsible for overseeing river operations and watershed protection measures. Amy has a Masters in Environmental Policy and Management with an emphasis in Natural Resource Management from the University of Denver. She graduated from Texas State University with a Bachelor of Science in Water Resources, a minor in Tourism, and a certificate in Environmental Interpretation.

She enjoys working in the community and the problem-solving aspect of her job the most, making every day a new challenge. She loves the rivers and being in New Braunfels with her husband, 5 children, and many pets.
